The Fox Who Lost His Tail
by Aesop

A fox is out for a walk in the woods when he catches his tail in the claws of a hunter's trap, that is tied securely to a tree. When the fox hears the hunter coming to check the trap, he is frightened. He knows that he has to choose: will he keep his tail and lose his life? Or will he leave his tail behind?

In his embarrassment, without his tail, the fox hides away from his friends. Then he has an idea. He calls a meeting of all the other foxes and speaks eloquently, encouraging them to follow his example and to cut off their tails as well.

³You have no idea how easy and comfortable life can be without that bothersome tail,² he tells them. ³I don't know why I didn't cut mine off a long time ago. I would never have believed it if I hadn't tried it. When you come to think about it, friends, tails are so inconvenient, unnecessary, dirty, filthy, smelly, and can even be dangerous because they can get caught in hunters' traps. It is strange we foxes have put up with them for so long. My sincere wish for you all is to experience this new freedom. I hope that you will part with your tails at once.²

An older and wiser fox steps forward. ³We are glad that it was convenient for you to cut off your own tail,² he says. ³However, we are not so convinced that you would try to convince us to part with our tails if there were any chance of ever recovering your own.²
